Prebiotics

Prebiotics

What are prebiotics?

While probiotics are living microorganisms, prebiotics are foods we provide to them to attract or increase their population.

Prebiotics

Why use them in cosmetics?

Increasing the population of a beneficial bacterium strengthens the protective barrier against pathogenic microorganisms, and we can obtain specific benefits such as increased collagen, reduced unpleasant odor, and disease prevention.

Aura C+

10% Vitamin C + Algae Mucilage + Prebiotics

- High antioxidant power.
- Enhances the action of sunscreen.
- Improves skin luminosity and elasticity.
- Reduces lines, wrinkles and expression marks.
- Stimulates collagen production.
- Brightening and even skin tone action.
- Firm, soft, hydrated and radiant skin

Market-available vitamin C products use ascorbic acid as an active ingredient (an extremely cheap and unstable active). As it oxidizes in the bottle, it can lose effectiveness and cause irritation. Ascorbyl Glucoside is a stabilized form of vitamin C in glucose and only releases the vitamin C molecule when absorbed by the skin and broken down by alpha-glucosidase enzymes. Therefore, it does not oxidize in the bottle.

Our proposal is different from traditional intimate deodorants. It's not about masking the natural odor of the vagina but rather supplying the intimate microbiota with prebiotics that enhance the protective barrier against fungi that cause candida, itching, unpleasant odor, etc.

As it contains plant enzymes that neutralize odors, it can be carried in the bag to apply on very hot days when the odor becomes stronger or when there is no time to return home.

Bar soaps, even if natural, glycerin-based, vegan, etc., have a very alkaline pH, which disrupts the vaginal microbiota and momentarily dries the skin, especially in mucous and more sensitive areas. Advise your customers to use Aura Bioma soap. If they continue to use bar soap, caution them not to apply intimate deodorant (or any product) immediately after bathing, as there may be momentary discomfort due to the high pH of bar soaps.
