

OUR PRODUCTS CAN HAVE FOUR DIFFERENT TEXTURES:

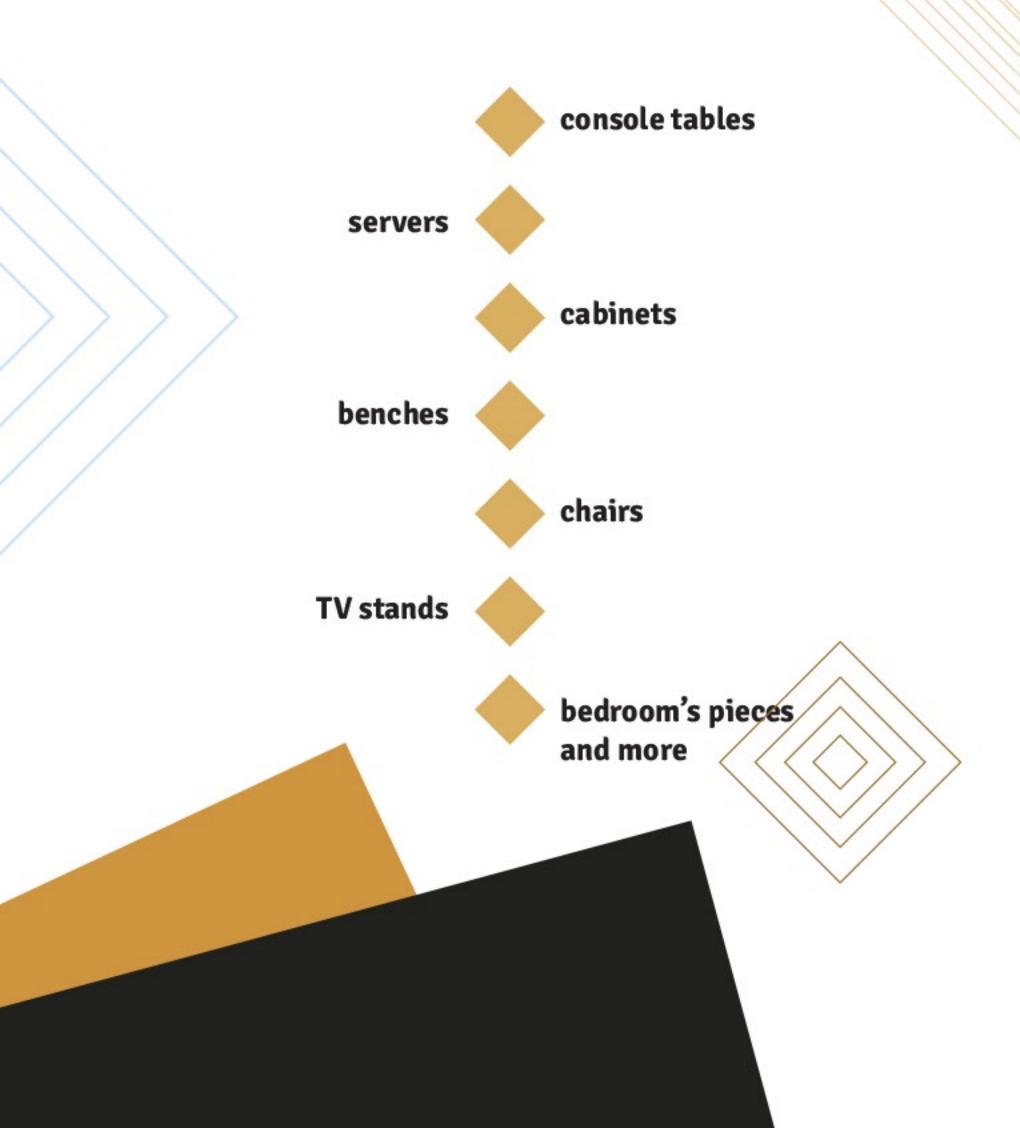

Rustic - the wood has deep grooves caused by the action of time through the years, it was located generally on the outside of the buildings where it did not receive painting.

Semi rustic - presents little or no deep grain, containing some saw signs. They were unpainted parts which were normally located inside the buildings.

With paint - presents several layers of original paint from the paintings that the building has received over the years.

Planed - the wood passes through deep machining leaving it very smooth and showing its coloration and natural grain, thus being similar to new wood.

THE RECLAIMED WOOD HISTORY

In the first decades of the last century, thousands of farmers cultivated coffee on small farms, especially in the interior of the southern states of Brazil.

Back at that time, the houses of those farmer's families, and many other constructions, were made of the most noble wood, the Peroba Rosa, which today is the main raw material for creating beautiful wood products.

Over the years, the population started to prefer masonry buildings and the wooden ones became obsolete. Wood constructions quickly became extremely coveted and contested for the high value of their structure.

Peroba Rosa wood, which may be more than 100 years old, is usually removed from old dismantled farmhouses, coffee storage sheds, electric energy poles, old mansions, restored and used in new furniture, from the rustic to the contemporary style. Comes with an ecological awareness of the reuse of a rare material. It is important to remember that Peroba Rosa, one of the main reclaimed woods, is an endangered species.

ABOUT THE WOOD

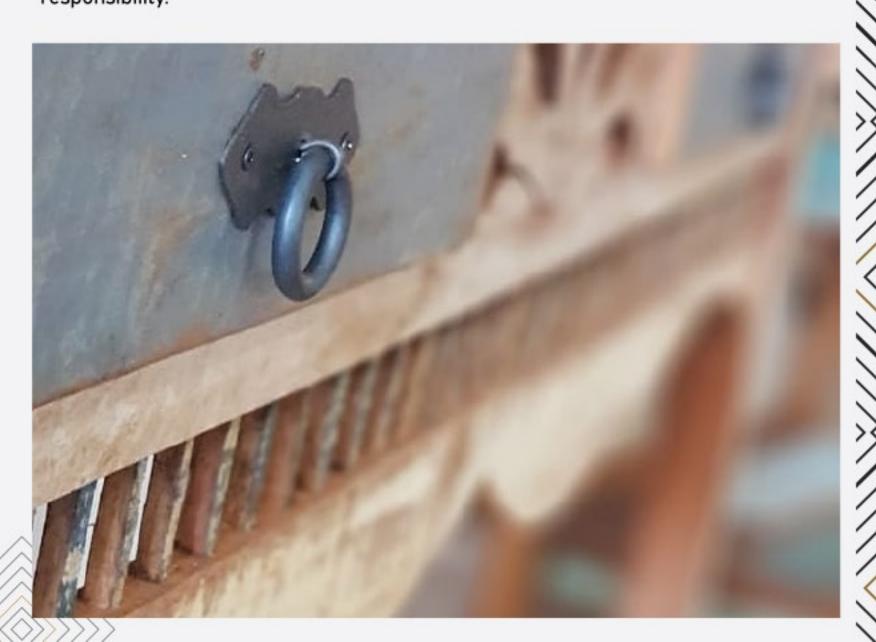

Considering the hardness of Peroba Rosa, which is 34% harder than Oak and a little harder than Black Locust, the furniture produced from it has the highest quality and durability.

Peroba Rosa is one of the hardest timbers and is a natural enemy of termites. Our furniture are made to last for generations.

When Peroba Rosa ages, it acquires a unique and fascinating character and develops a distinct texture, with a beauty rarely seen.

The reclaimed wood has an identity that comes from a lifetime, traces and marks of time, remnants of paint and all the natural side of a beautiful wood.

Reclaimed wood is a noble form of expression in the realization of an architectural project, from the simplest to the most sophisticated, the contrast between the old and the modern results in beautiful works with ecological responsibility.
