Introduction

Noni is the common name for Morinda citrifolia, a small to medium sized tree (3–10 m high) with a pantropical distribution. Noni fruit and leaves have a history of food use among Pacific Islanders as well as in Southern and Southeast Asia. Although the fruit is edible, its flavor has been described as akin to bad cheese. Despite this, Rarotongans ate the fruit often and the Burmese used it to prepare curries.

Australian Aborigines ate noni fruit during the cool-dry season from May to August in the Northern Territory of Australia. Noni leaves were eaten both in raw and cooked form in Java and Thailand. In Tahiti, fish were wrapped in the leaves as a part of baking to impart an appealing flavor to the cooked fish.

More recently, the fruit has been used to produce dietary supplements. French Polynesia has been a major source of this juice where noni fruit puree constitutes one of the area's largest agricultural exports. In fact, more than 21,000 metric tons of this puree was exported in the past decade. The noni plant was the most important and widely used Polynesian medicinal plant prior to the arrival of Europeans with Tahitian healers using it in many remedies. Some uses of the fruit include the treatment of inflammation, abscesses, angina, diabetes, ranula, abdominal fibromas, and scorpionfish stings. In other parts of French Polynesia, noni fruit has been reportedly used to treat osteoarthritis, rheumatism, backache, joint problems, hemorrhoids, skin allergies, burns, and warts. The global popularity of the juice is attributable to its perceived health value.

About us

PAMEM S.A. DE C.V. was established in 1986 to process, commercialize and export coffee. Founded by Pedro Antonio Menjivar, a man of word and fairness, recognized for his entrepreneurial spirit, his social commitment with partners, employees and the environment.

“The natural alternative for your health and beauty made from organic Noni”

The success in marketing and export of coffee created the opportunity for growth and diversification; therefore, we began working on activities related to agriculture, such as planting, processing and commercialization of rice, bean and sugar. We began searching for new agricultural products that would help enrich the diet of our customers. In 2004 we discovered this sensational fruit called Noni which complements the efforts of our company to create proactive health for everyone.

Also, our company plants and harvest the best fruit in the Central American region – according to Mr. Rick Penney, Noni expert from New Zealand –.

Organic farm

The industrial phase begins with the proper postharvest handling of the fruit, harvested at optimum physiological maturity “porcelain white”. Next, the fruit is received at the processing plant and subjected to a process of selection and final classification, which eliminates green fruits and those of poor quality, intended for compost used at an early stage agriculture.

The fruit is subjected to a process of soaking in water, which aims to remove impurities (trash and/or dust) of the fruit and moved to a disinfection process (sanitization) in a solution of chlorinated water to reduce the burden of organisms from the fruit. Next, sanitation by eliminating green carpels that are removed and destined for the composting process in the agricultural phase.

Once the fruit is cleaned, it is placed on trays so as to eliminate as much water as possible and reduce the chances of survival and reproduction of microorganisms during the aging phase lasting no less than 120 days. Once we have completed the phase of aging or anaerobic fermentation, the fruit turned to pulp is subjected to a process of pressing in a hydraulic press, giving juice free of seeds and remains of cuticle of the fruit. Subsequently, the juice obtained is subjected to pasteurization and then ready to be packed in containers of different capacity (bottles, liters or gallons). At the end of the process the containers are labeled and packaged for subsequent storage and distribution.
