Recycling empty packaging

Coconut husks as ground cover

If our business is – literally – a fruit of the environment, there is nothing more natural than looking to respect, to conservation and even to environmental protection, throughout the various stages of the production process.

The correct disposal of used defensive and fertilizer packaging is an elegant example of how the São Francisco Valley stands out. We send all our empty packaging to the Acavasf recycling centre

Another relevant feature is the utilization of organic residues as ground cover to protect the soils of each vineyard, enabling not only nutrients to be fully exploited, but also greater conservation of the humidity produced by irrigation, with the use of coconut husk for this purpose.

Meanwhile, in the field of social action, the highlight is the Cooperative's monthly contribution to APAMI, a funding body of the Dom Tomás Cancer Hospital, the 4 largest charitable organization in the State of Pernambuco, which serves and provides care for thousands of people within a radius of around 300 km.

TRANSPARENCY
EXPERIENCE.

We understand that issues such as ethics and transparency are inseparable from business. There is no way to build a good business without having these values as guidelines for each one of our attitudes, both on and off our farms.

It is for this reason that, whether dealing with our staff or with our suppliers, in relations with members of our cooperative or with our customers, these values always lead the way, enabling us to develop a commercial understanding that is clear and transparent.

Thus, at the end of each stage, the parties involved are satisfied with the results, because they are within what has been previously discussed and agreed, without false expectations or unfulfilled promises.

And all of this is a fruit of the vast experience we have built up. Even though COOPA is a young organization, our team and members have had over a decade of production, commercial and export activities on their farms.

We have more than a decade

What we have presented so far therefore embodies a very clear aim for all of us – the technical team, administration and producers – that make up COOPA – Petrolina Agricultural Cooperative: to meet and exceed the expectations of our customers.

For this reason, to deliver grapes that are tasty, attractive, clean and safe is the mission we carry out every day. To this end we spare no effort or investment in human resources, in sustainable practices and in the most modern agricultural management techniques.

We unite the highest agricultural technology with the experience and knowledge of our technical team, made up of professionals with great expertise and broad experience in the production of grapes, in a region that is already world-famous.

Petrolina, The São Francisco Valley, The Semi-Arid Northeast of Brazil, with the River São Francisco as the life-force of irrigated fruticulture, enables us to have fresh quality fruits at our disposal all year round to serve our customers all over the world.
