PULSES

Pulses may be defined as the “DRIED EDIBLE SEEDS” of cultivated legume. They belong to the family of peas, beans and lentils.

Pulses are also called “Magic grains” and contain more protein than any other plant. They serve as a low-cost protein to meet the needs of the large section of the people.

Nutritionally, immature fruits have distinctively different properties to those of the mature seeds; the protein content is lower but they are relatively richer in vitamins and soluble carbohydrates.

Pulses are fairly good sources of thiamine and niacin and also provide calcium and iron.
